Fifteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time

Father Jim's Wise & "Otherwise"

There were two monks, one somber and one joyful.

The first monk prayed all day in deep, motionless silence. The second sang and danced his praise of God near a great tree in the monastery garden.

One day an angel appeared to the first monk, saying, "I have come from God and you have been given permission to ask Him one question. What is your question?"

The somber monk quickly asked, "How many more lives must I live before I will attain self-realization?"

The angel then went to the second monk and gave him the same message. And the second monk asked the angel exactly the same question.

A week later, the angel returned to the first monk and said, "I have your answer. You must live three more lives before you will attain self-realization."

The first monk started to weep and moan, "Three more lives, three more lives, Oh, no! Three more lives."

The angel went to the second monk and said, "I have your answer. You must live as many more lives as there are leaves on that tree before you will attain self-realization."

The second monk looked up at the tree and said, "Why, there must be 10,000 leaves on that tree! Only 10,000 more lives" And he began to sing and dance joyfully.

How many people do you know who go through life always seeing a glass that's half empty? What are their lives like? I'll bet they are the negative, critical, pessimistic folks that you go out of your way to avoid. On the other hand, there are the half-full people who exude optimism and positive thinking. These are the men and women we enjoy being around.
